Article abstract

This essay on electoral geography, the first, perhaps, to be published in Canada, is divided into four distinct parts. The first one deals with the themes of the twenty five provincial electoral campaigns. It includes maps showing the results of the votation in every county of the Province, as divided between the two main political parties, the Liberal and the Conservative. The second part, almost exclusively graphic, examines the political attitude of every provincial county. To circumvent the various problems, graphic curves have been established, indicating the percentage of the liberal and conservative voters and of the nonvoters. In a third part, some aspects of a very particular electoral phenomenon, abstention, are studied. After all possible causes of error had been discarded, a nonvoter curve was obtained, which is used, in particular, to study the fluctuations of the parties. Finally, the influence of the rural vote, a basic element in a long life ministerial party, the geographical distribution of the parties and its evolution within the regions according to certain causes v.g. economic crises, and the Québec electoral System, in relation to the vote and to the parties, are analyzed in a last part about the conditions of political life in the Province of Québec.

NOTE LIMINAIRE

*L*es Cahiers de géographie de Québec sont heureux de publier dans ce numéro une étude originale et tout à fait neuve dans la province de Québec. Bien que se situant un peu en marge de la géographie, cette étude présente une série de documents qui pourront servir de base à des études de géographie électorale du Québec. Pour ces raisons, nous avons accepté de publier cet article qui s'écarte un peu du style habituel de notre revue.

Il faut d'ailleurs signaler que ces documents graphiques et cartographiques, accompagnés d'un autre texte, ont fait la matière d'une thèse de maîtrise en géographie présentée récemment par monsieur Jacques Letarte à l'Institut de géographie de l'université Laval.
