Contributors

David Bain is a librarian with Toronto Public Library. Trained as a landscape architect, he has written a number of articles on the history of Toronto parks and open spaces. His current project concerns the development of venues for pigeon shooting and related sporting activities in east end Toronto.

Lorene Bridgen has recently completed her Master's degree in History at the University of Windsor and is currently enrolled in the University of Waterloo's Ph.D. program in History. Her research interests focus mainly on African-Canadian history. She is also a research assistant for the Promised Land Project: The Freedom Experience of Blacks in the Chatham and Dawn Settlements.

David Calverley, Ph.D. (University of Ottawa) is currently Head of History at Crescent School in Toronto and, most recently, the lead author of History of Canada On-Line, Junior Edition (online, 2007). He has also written extensively on the history of Canada's first peoples.

Daniel Laxer studied history and music for his undergraduate degree at the University of Alberta, completed his M.A. at York University, and is now working on his Ph.D. at the University of Toronto under Allan Greer. Interested in the cross-cultural musical interactions of the fur trade, he studies the repertoires of French, Aboriginal, Métis, and British peoples.

Anne Warner is a Ph.D. candidate studying sport history at the University of Western Ontario in the Kinesiology department. She is interested in the historical development of women's sport in Canada, and outdoor recreation and sport taking place in federal and provincial parks.
