January Manifestation

---

Janna Knittel

Lemon Cooler moon dipped in lavender liqueur skies: Backdrop to snow-frosted park.
Epiphany. On the calendar it's meaningless to heathens.
On a snowfield turning rosy it's possibility.
Suggestion of a trail under veil of new snow, sun retiring south-and-west, lowered on invisible chains, chill hunched upon your shoulders as night stalks in on gray paws, shaking cinders among stars.

Winter Evening Woods

---

Janna Knittel

Deer so tame they look up only to move a few strides farther from the trail as skiers and snow-shoers pass—they appear plump and woolen as domestic sheep in their winter coats. Underneath fur, their muscles twitch, lean from winter foraging. As fog lies down in these woods, as light dims, listen for daytime birds still chattering in birches. Night will unroll its blanket throughout the next hour, giving you time to kick-glide around icy tracks once more, time to make thighs and shoulders deeply ache, time for cold to finger your thin layers of clothes, time to remember the time you skied this loop after work, entirely in the dark, with only your thoughts, and schusch of skies, in pursuit.
